

I do not think that the FCC should implement any type of nation Telephone Privacy Standard. Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law has reduced our unwanted telephone calls from 14 or 15 a week to 1 a month. It got so annoying before the law went into effect that we got Caller I.D. just so we could screen our calls. Unless the FCC can guarantee that their national standard will be this effective, then maybe they should just leave this issue up to the individual states. Thanks, Gregory A. Dickey
